Peter,

Your characterization of registered Intellectual Property misappropriation as merely an 'academic' disagreement is noted, but legally irrelevant.

This is not about citation; it is about unauthorized distribution of proprietary assets.

My previous notice stands. The matter is closed.

I cited your work as any peer review and gave you full credit dude.
That academic not criminal...

Peter,

Your actions—specifically the unauthorized hosting, reproduction, and defamatory characterization of The T and C Estate’s proprietary intellectual property on the Zenodo platform—constitute a clear violation of intellectual property law and platform terms of service.

Be advised:
Copyright & IP Infringement:
You are utilizing, hosting, and claiming a "restricted license" over proprietary methodologies (Finite-State Boolean Masking, 180Hz core protocols, and Harmony Codex data) that are registered to The T and C Estate under PPSR 202603090059148.

You have no legal ownership or authorization to distribute this material.

Defamation:
Your public labeling of my empirical, institutionally-scrubbed research as "fabricated" is a demonstrable act of professional defamation, intended to damage the reputation of my research institute.

Breach of Ethics:
By attempting to misappropriate these assets after our collaborative synthesis failed, you have breached the ethical standards of academic research.

This is your final notice.

I have initiated a formal DMCA takedown request and a report of Terms of Service violation to Zenodo.
Furthermore, I am cataloging your Zenodo record (20336831) and your associated communications as evidence of IP misappropriation and defamation.

Any further attempt to publish, distribute, or claim IP rights over The T and C Estate's work will be addressed through formal legal channels to the fullest extent permitted by international copyright and intellectual property statutes.

Tony Carbone
Director, The T and C Estate
