Mr. Carbone,

You have initiated legal action against me (or have repeatedly threatened to do so) and have refused to provide a solicitor's address for service of legal notices. You have also demanded that I cease all contact, threatening to characterise any further communication as harassment.

As you have initiated legal action and refused to provide an alternative contact for legal notices and correspondence, you cannot threaten harassment in service of legal notices to this email address. You cannot demand no further contact, as such actions are a violation of due legal process and constitute interference with the proper service of legal notices – which is itself a potential criminal offence (obstruction of justice / abuse of process).

I am therefore entitled to send legal notices (including this one) to the only address you have made available. This is not harassment; it is a lawful exercise of my rights to communicate about an ongoing legal dispute that you initiated.

Your attempt to claim harassment for the service of documents in this legal dispute will be brought to the attention of the presiding judge as false litigation and a situation created by you in an attempt to falsify evidence.

If you wish to avoid further emails, immediately provide the name and address of a solicitor authorised to accept service on your behalf. I will direct all future correspondence to that solicitor and will not contact you directly again.

Until you provide solicitor details, I will continue to send legal notices to this email address as necessary. I do not consent to any claim of harassment, and I reserve all my rights..

Peter James Thompson

Note:
· I have no fixed address. Service at any address you may have (e.g., my father's) is not service on me.
· Your emails now go directly to my spam folder, which I do not check unless required, and they are automatically deleted after 30 days. Service via this email address is not effective.
· I do not read any newspapers. Service by newspaper publication would not come to my attention.

Have a nice day...
