Peter,

Your recent actions regarding the unauthorized upload of proprietary data to Zenodo (Record 20336831) have escalated this matter from a professional disagreement to a severe legal and ethical breach.

By hosting The T and C Estate's data files, applying your own restricted license to them, and publishing defamatory commentary, you have exposed yourself to significant liability.

Be advised of the exact legal and ethical boundaries you have crossed:

1. Copyright and Intellectual Property Infringement.

In Australia, copyright over original methodologies, datasets, and data-scrubbing protocols (including the Finite-State Boolean Masking and Harmony Codex files) is inherent and automatic the moment they are created.

You do not own the copyright to the files you uploaded as "Exhibits."

You have unlawfully reproduced and distributed intellectual property that is strictly registered to The T and C Estate under PPSR 202603090059148 and fortified by our patent filings with IP Australia.

Claiming a "restricted license" over data you did not author is a direct violation of international copyright statutes.

2. Professional Defamation and Libel.

Publishing an indexed, written claim that my empirical, institutionally processed research is "fabricated" or "fraudulent" constitutes libel.

You are attempting to weaponize my proprietary data-filtering protocols to falsely frame the absence of noise as "fraud," specifically to damage my professional standing and the operational reputation of my research institute.

This is a demonstrable act of defamation, and it provides clear grounds for civil litigation.

3. Breach of Confidence and Academic Ethics.

The data you uploaded was provided to you in strict confidence, exclusively for the purpose of a collaborative synthesis. Weaponizing privately shared, proprietary data against a former collaborator to force a public dispute is a severe breach of confidentiality.

It is a gross violation of standard academic research ethics, one that heavily compromises your professional credibility within institutional and university networks.

4. Platform Terms of Service Violations.

Zenodo explicitly prohibits the unauthorized hosting of copyrighted material and the use of its repository for targeted harassment or defamation.

A formal DMCA Takedown Notice and Terms of Service violation report have already been submitted to Zenodo's legal and support teams, accompanied by my official government IP documentation.

This serves as your legal notice of civil litigation of breach against IP owned by The T and C Estate.
